Cool Beans System Info For Windows (April-2022)

Software Description Cool Beans System Info is a lightweight software solution that provides information about the hardware side of your computer, relying on a fully customizable interface. With a graph supposed to stay on top of all the other screens to show you CPU and RAM usage, Cool Beans System Info is capable of monitoring not only CPU, physical memory and swap file usage, but also the network and the running processes. While the floating window is supposed to display brief information about the system, the “System Details” window is the one that perfectly brings all details in the spotlight. It adopts a tabbed layout, which means that users can quickly see the collected stats on any of the supported hardware devices. The “General” tab for instance shows Windows version, system uptime, CPU, memory and page file usage, while the “Task” screen is more like a task manager that helps you quickly terminate a running app. For more power in this regard however, users are recommended to switch to “Processes”, which is actually the tab that presents all running processes, along with information such as process ID, priority and threads. With support for dual-core processors, Cool Beans System Info also shows CPU features and the path to important Windows folders. As for network, it keeps an eye on download and upload transfer rates, while also showing brief stats for every single adapter in your system. Cool Beans System Info is not at all difficult to use and the interface is fully customizable thanks to a dedicated options menu that lets you change colors and other visual elements. The program doesn't hamper system performance at all and can be used on any Windows workstation out there. All things considered, Cool Beans System Info is indeed a handy piece of software, but it only comprises a bit of everything. There are many other areas to be monitored when it comes to a Windows workstation and some other similar apps on the market provide a lot more details in this regard.
