The patch file is usually available online, and it is used to unlock the full version of the software. Once the patch is copied, you need to run it and then follow the instructions on the screen. The newest version of Photoshop is a milestone in its history. It reaffirms (to me at least) that Photoshop was always more about the image-editing craze of its golden era of post-1990s, rather it was about creating a live-action game-changer. It's the one Adobe blockbuster app that will take digital imaging from hobbyists and pros alike onto the bleeding-edge of home and professional use. When I was a consultant, I focused on Photoshop and Adobe Premiere (for video), and the difference in results was shocking. Computer-savvy consumers and pros that were willing to spend big bucks could create professional-looking images that would dazzle the untrained eye. I speak to companies daily that are still stuck in the film versus digital era. With a few weeks of training, they could easily convert their film jobs into the digital age. I even worked with a company that insisted on using film, until a final project was delivered. How will this affect the company? Answer: I expect that the company will be a bigger success. They've turned everything into an app. I can print out a spreadsheet, then email it to one of the business people I was talking to on camera 5 minutes before. These are just examples of things that could have been done. The opinions of existing users will be turned into memorable experiences, behavior models, and added features. If this does not occur, then we will be stranded on an island with nothing but the uninformed pieces of software the company has created.

Photoshop has been updated to offer new native API improvements to support the transition to movable and interactive native media that requires updates to the configuration, rendering, and many other aspects of the pipeline. Some developers may have depended on Photoshop's legacy 3D feature set. This feature is no longer available in the applications. It's important to ensure that tools and workflows you use now are chosen to match the features of the native pipeline. If you have workflows relying on 3D features, stay tuned for upcoming announcements to learn more about how those tools will be affected.
